Journal of the Chemical Society, Volume 84 May 21 2020 This work has been selected by scholars as being culturally important, and is part of the knowledge base of civilization as we know it. This work was reproduced from the original artifact, and remains as true to the original work as possible. Therefore, you will see the original copyright references, library stamps (as most of these works have been housed in our most important libraries around the world), and other notations in the work. This work is in the public domain in the United States of America, and possibly other nations. Within the United States, you may freely copy and distribute this work, as no entity (individual or corporate) has a copyright on the body of the work. As a reproduction of a historical artifact, this work may contain missing or blurred pages, poor pictures, errant marks, etc. Scholars believe, and we concur, that this work is important enough to be preserved, reproduced, and made generally available to the public. We appreciate your support of the preservation process, and thank you for being an important part of keeping this knowledge alive and relevant.

Journal of the Chemical Society, 1921, Vol. 102 Jan 29 2021 Excerpt from Journal of the Chemical Society, 1921, Vol. 102: Abstract of Papers on Organic Chemistry; Part I In the presence of free oxygen, the separation of hexachloroethane may be prevented (in all cases it is diminished) by another reaction, which gives rise to chlorine, hydrogen chloride, and, in the absence of excess of free acid, ferric oxide a little chloroform is also produced. Trichloroacetic acid acts as an oxygen carrier, the free acid itself being oxidised with liberation of chlorine. Though the amount of copper exposed was comparatively large with respect to the volume of water, yet we may safely assume that the same solvent action takes place with smaller quantities, though to a proportionately less extent, and as copper exerts on the human system a very poisonous effect, it is important to know what solvent action different waters have on this metal, especially as Copper vessels are so largely used for various culinary purposes, and as pipes and cisterns composed of it are not unfrequently employed for conveying and storing water intended for household use.
